Mildred Stahlman, MD

AQA, Vanderbilt University School of Medicine, 1945

Dr. Stahlman attended Ward-Belmont, a Nashville finishing school for young ladies, then entered Vanderbilt Medical School in 1943. She graduated in 1946 and served as an intern at Lakeside Hospital in Cleveland, as a pediatric intern at Children's Hospital in Boston, as assistant resident on the pediatric service at Vanderbilt, as an exchange fellow at the Royal Caroline Institute in Stockholm, and as a cardiac resident at La Rabida Sanitarium in Chicago. She became an instructor in Pediatrics at Vanderbilt in 1951.

In 1961, there was no such thing as neonatal intensive care. Babies born prematurely with underdeveloped lungs died. That year, a baby girl was born with severe hyaline membrane disease. Everyone agreed that unless something was done, she would die. With her parent's permission, a bold experiment began.

Using the equipment, technology, and human knowledge that were on-hand, a medical breakthrough occurred. For the first time in the history of medicine, a premature baby was helped to breathe by the use of a respirator.

For five days, Dr. Stahlman and her team stayed, night and day, by the fragile baby girl's side, monitoring her blood gases, the pressures in her blood vessels and respiratory system, as well as EKG readings. This ability to monitor vital signs was a daily challenge to the researchers, who had to use modified equipment that was never meant for such a tiny body.

That first patient now leads a productive life, working as a nurse in the NICU.

The Stahlman Neonatal Intensive Care Unit at Vanderbilt University Hospital was one of the first modern neonatal intensive care units in the world.

Medicine was more than a profession for Dr. Stahlman, it was a calling. She passed away June 29, at the age of 101 years.
